From Friday 30 September 2022, Imperial War Museums (IWM) presents War Games: Real Conflicts | Virtual Worlds | Extreme Entertainment, a brand-new season challenging perceptions of how video games interpret stories about war and conflict. Comprising a major exhibition, a playable retro game zone and an accompanying public programme, War Games explores the relationship between video games and conflict through a series of titles which, over the last forty years, have reflected events from the First World War to the present.

War Games exhibition

Open at IWM London, War Games (30 September 2022 – 28 May 2023) is the UK’s first exhibition to delve into one of today’s most popular storytelling mediums and ask how the reality of war is represented in the virtual world of a video game. Showcasing immersive installations, never-before-displayed objects and perspectives from industry experts, this free exhibition presents blockbuster games like Sniper Elite 5 and Call of Duty: Modern Warfare alongside indie titles such as This War of Mine and Bury Me, My Love, raising questions about how different developers have portrayed conflict and highlighting real-life stories which many have drawn inspiration from.

Featuring 12 diverse case studies, War Games invites visitors to interrogate the tension that exists between the thrill and tragedy of warfare in a game and its repercussions in the real world. Common gameplay tropes such as explosive barrels and sniper rifles feature next to collection items like facial prosthetics developed in the First World War. The exhibition also explores how video game technology can be used, and is used, to help shape real wars, presenting brand new acquisitions including an Xbox 360 controller once used to operate the camera of an unmanned aerial vehicle in Afghanistan and Iraq.

War Games: Real Conflicts | Virtual Worlds | Extreme Entertainment is supported by lead sponsor Rebellion.
Further expanding on the themes of the exhibition, visitors will have the opportunity to get hands on with War Games. From 30 September 2022 – 2 January 2023, the exhibition is accompanied by a retro game zone where visitors can play 13 iconic titles including Battlezone, Medal of Honor and Top Gun on consoles ranging from the Atari 2600 to the Sega Dreamcast. Together, these titles ask players to consider in real time what different games can tell us about war and conflict.

War Games Live

On Saturday 26 November 2022, IWM will present War Games Live, a half day festival bringing together leading designers, podcaster, musicians and gaming enthusiasts for a series of talks, panels and music – all exploring the phenomenon of conflict-based video games. Featuring key industry names including award-winning game designers Brenda and John Romero and The Gadget Show’s Jordan Erica Webber, this unique ticketed event will also grant guests after-hours access to the War Games exhibition and retro game zone.

From behind-the-scenes talks with games creators at Rebellion and World of Tanks to music from a renowned games composer, War Games Live will also invite participation from gamers and up-and-coming developers. The festival will culminate in the announcement of a Games Jam in association with the Historical Games Network and the University of Glasgow’s Games and Gaming Lab, challenging entrants to create the ultimate war video game based on underexplored stories from Britain’s conflict history since 1914 and inspired by IWM objects.

War Games Live is an IWM Institute event sponsored by World of Tanks and in association with the Historical Games Network.
